Even so, many companies face an ongoing challenge in attempting to reconcile their human rights responsibilities with other legitimate business objectives, including their fiduciary duties to shareholders. This workshop will introduce several methods that firms might use to bring their business goals and human rights responsibilities into closer alignment, including the application of accepted risk management practices to identify, prioritize, and measure their human rights impacts. Objectives: To explore methods that companies may consider in linking metrics of business risk and opportunity to their human rights performance. Special attention will be paid to key lessons learned in the 2013 workshop regarding Japanese business culture and practice. * The workshop will be conducted under Chatham House rule •Roger D.
